How to Fix a Dislocated Shoulder

A joint dislocation can be one of the most painful injuries if not reset in a timely manner. Shoulder dislocations will stretch the shoulder, upper arm, and torso muscles, causing intense pain. An initial dislocation will cause the body to release endorphins to reduce pain and shock, but once the endorphin rush is gone, a dislocated shoulder will continue to cause severe muscle aches.

OPAC Web Services Should Be Like Amazon Web Services

fNo, I'm not talking about the interface our users see in the web browser — there's enough argument about that — I'm talking about web services, the technologies that form much of the infrastructure for Web 2.0.

Once upon a time, the technology that displayed a set of data, let's say catalog records, was inextricably linked to the technology that stored that set of data. As we started to fill our data repositories, we found it useful to import (and export) the data so that

Library Catalogs Should Be Like WordPress

Library catalogs should be like WordPress. That is, every entry should support comments, trackbacks, and pingbacks. Every record should have a permalink. Content should be tag-able. The look should be easily customizable with themes. Everything should be available via RSS or Atom. It should be extendable with a rich plugin API. And when that fails, it would be nice if it were all written in a convenient language like PHP so we can hack it ourselves.

WPopac: An OPAC 2.0 Testbed

First things first, this thing probably needs a better name, but I'm not up to the task. Got ideas? Post in the comments. For the rest of this, let's just pretend it's an interview.

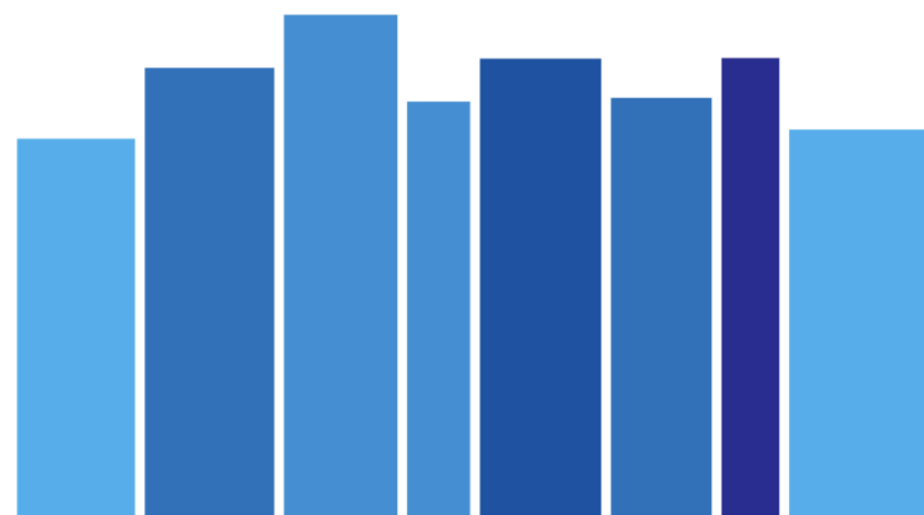

What is WPopac? It's an OPAC — a library catalog, for my readers outside libraries — inside the framework of WordPress, the hugely popular blog management application.

Why misuse WordPress that way? WordPress has a few things we care about built-in: permalinks, comments, and trackbacks (and a good comment spam filter), just to start. But it also offers something we've never seen in a library application before: access to a community of knowledge, programmers, and designers outside libraries. Because the core of WPopac is WordPress, and because it preserves WordPress's rich plugin API and themes structure, it already has more users, designers, developers, and administrators than all the ILS vendors combined.

So, down with the ILS? Well, no. There are some brave souls working on full-fledged open-source ILSs, but that's not my goal here. The ILS does a lot of stuff I don't want to be responsible for, like the acquisitions workflow and I just received a call from a brand new resident who wanted to know our library hours so she could come down and register. Her particular interest was gardening. I proudly assured her that we had an excellent gardening collection. And we do!

There are so many avid gardeners in town that we have to have new information for them every winter and spring. I could list an abecedarius of garden books from "Accessible" to "Zen." With everything in between: wildflowers, bird-friendly, lasagna, low maintenance, shade, landscape, spiritual, to name a few.

Book Description

The bestselling author of The Botany of Desire explores the ecology of eating to unveil why we consume what we consume in the twenty-first century

"What should we have for dinner?" To one degree or another this simple question assails any creature faced with a wide choice of things to eat. Anthropologists call

I am about 2/3rds of the way through the book, The Omnivore's Dilemma by Michael Pollan. A friend recommended it one night over dinner. I have not eaten a dinner without increased consciousness since! I am curious who else has/is reading the book and what has impacted the reader, what changes s/he has made in their lives.

What hits me most about this book is how, even though I considered myself a healthy eater, there is so much really bad stuff in food. The entire connection to money and making the most money and selling out is

I haven't read the book, but the issue of local sustainability is important.

Perhaps you or others might be interested in getting together informally or "webally" (my word!), to talk and share what we've been doing as large/small growers of food.

I'm sure there are many people here in Tamworth would love to begin growing their own food but don't know where to begin.

You two should know that there is a group already meeting discussing local sustainability issues. And we have assembled a temporary "Sustainability Collection" to support them in their endeavors. For more information, check the Tamworth Exchange for meeting times, and/or click here to see the sustainability collection.

This photograph was taken at the Burgess Mill Digester House in January 1945. The man on the right is Roger Dignard (spelling of name may be incorrect).

This picture was taken at the Burgess first Digester House . We knew it as the Old Chip Loft back in our days. There was still one digester used for Black Liquor storage and that was #19. The Chip Loft was right above the Digesters, there was a gate that the operator opened and the chips would flow by gravity into the Digester. Same theory applied with the Blow Valves which would open directly into what we knew as the Blow Pits.

Stumbled upon this photo. I am quite certain that the man on the right is my uncle; and the name is spelled correctly.
